OLD BUSINESS (PARTICIPATION FOR FUTURE MEETINGS)

Sergeant Mark Tushaus, from the City of Brookfield Police Department, stated the focal point of the past meeting was to reach out and bring other law enforcement agencies back to the meetings who may have not been attending for some time. Each jurisdiction has their own unique form of government, and the meetings are a form of networking and brainstorming with different resources to find answers and solve problems. One of the topics for this meeting was "Safety Concerns With School Buses", and he thanked all of the school bus representatives for attending.

SAFETY CONCERNS WITH SCHOOL BUSES – STUDENT SAFETY

Five school bus companies were represented at the meeting to include: Dousman Transport, First Student, Go Riteway, Hank's Transportation, and Johnson Bus. Some of the topics brought up included what rules each municipality has regarding red light violations, and rules regarding an emergency stop response to emergency vehicles. It was suggested if school buses are already stopped on the roadway, they should stay where they are on the side of the road, with the red flashing lights from the bus remaining on, and with all children staying on the bus, until the emergency vehicles go around and pass through. The situation should be treated the same as if it were an intersection. Some drivers radio ahead to the bus in front to warn them of approaching emergency vehicles. It was agreed by all that the safety of the children always comes first.

The school bus representatives stated that one of the major problems is cars going through red lights, and all representatives agreed that there are at least several violators every day. Sometimes it is difficult for the bus drivers to obtain plate numbers, and they do rely on the county and municipalities to help them out. They also stated that high speed areas, reconditioned roads, and four lane divided highways are the most troublesome areas. Traffic Safety Commission representatives stated the school bus representatives should let their municipalities know of the number of violations and identify their problem areas. In turn, the bus drivers like to have feedback on what the outcome is on violations that they report. It was suggested that the public should be more educated by the school district notifying the parents through e-mails on what the laws are concerning school buses and traffic safety. Also perhaps the local newspapers could have a feature article on bus safety.

It was suggested that while the bus drivers are having in-service, a law enforcement representative from their local jurisdiction could attend and answer any questions they may have.

Evacuation procedures for schools involved in an emergency situation were also discussed. It was stated how important it is to have a safety committee within each school district. Each jurisdiction has certain requirements, each has special needs, and each has special geographical needs. Evacuation drills performed by the schools are available for observation.

COMMUNITY MAPS

Andrea Loeffelholz, Outreach Specialist from the University of Wisconsin - Madison, Transportation Information Center, presented a follow-up from the last meeting on "Community Maps" which provides Wisconsin's local law enforcement and Traffic Safety Commissions with an on-line interface for visualizing and mapping crash data. All Traffic Safety Commissions are required to provide an "electronic spot map". She then provided detailed instructions on how to plot crashes within the county using a laptop and projection screen.
